Dear Bookseller,

For 25 years, Jack and Annie have taken readers on grand adventures in the magic tree house. For the 25th anniversary, we decided it was time to refresh the branding and pave the way for many more adventures yet to come!

The new branding encourages young readers to progress from the shorter Magic Tree House adventures to the more challenging Merlin Missions. (If you flip this booklet over, you'll find more information and activities for the newly rebranded Magic Tree House books.) Please feel free to use the activities in this booklet to help the books' adventures come to life! We look forward to another 25 years of introducing kids to the joy of reading.

May you have many exciting adventures!

Safe travels,

LOGIC PUZZLE

Jack and Annie are writing a story about three penguins. Annie has given them names, and Jack has decided they will each be a different species of penguin. There will be one emperor penguin, one Galápagos penguin, and one little penguin. Each penguin lives either at the equator, in Australia, or in Antarctica. And each penguin has ear feathers of a particular color—yellow, gray, or black. Can you figure out which penguin is which? Use the grid to help you!

1. Lenny lives at the Equator.
2. Penny is not a Galápagos penguin.
3. The emperor penguin does not have black feathers around its ears.
4. Boo is a little penguin, and her ear feathers are not black or yellow.
5. The penguin that lives in Australia has gray ear feathers.
6. The emperor penguin lives in Antarctica.

Penguin	Location	Ear Color	Species
Lenny
Penny
Boo

ANSWER KEY

Penguin	Location	Ear Color	Species
Boo	Australia	gray	little
Penny	Antarctica	yellow	emperor
Lenny	equator	black	Galápagos

25 YEARS OF GROWING READERS

MAGIC TREE HOUSE®

In 1992, a chapter book series launched and instantly sparked a love of reading in children. The Magic Tree House series, by Mary Pope Osborne, has sold over 134 million books and has had a significant impact on the way children around the world learn to read.

In 2017, we celebrate 25 years of this legacy of growing readers with a new look for the series. The refreshed packaging reflects what parents and teachers already know: that these books encourage readers to learn, progress, and discover.

The Magic Tree House look now clearly delineates a reading journey through three distinct lines: Magic Tree House titles for beginning chapter book readers, Merlin Missions for more advanced readers, and Fact Trackers for nonfiction fans. By renumbering the 55 fiction titles in two groups (plus a Super Edition!), we are encouraging readers to stay with their favorite series longer, giving them a sense of accomplishment as they move from the classic adventures into the Merlin Missions.

Twenty-five years later, Magic Tree House continues to prove that it is the premier chapter book series of all time.

READING TIPS

Use these handy tips to make reading with your kids even more fun!

1. Set aside time every day to read aloud from a Magic Tree House adventure. As you read each book, stop along the way to ask your kids about their favorite parts so far and what they think will happen next in the story.
2. Keep an "End-of-Mission Journal" with your kids. Help them recall facts about their mission in sequential order and encourage them to write about their favorite part of each mission. This will sharpen their critical-thinking skills and provide a fun bonding experience.
3. Write a letter with your kids to their grandparents, a friend, or even the author, Mary Pope Osborne, in which they share which Magic Tree House adventure has been their favorite to read and all the interesting things they've learned from the series.

Dear Parent,

For 25 years, it's been my pleasure to write the Magic Tree House series. Now some of my earliest readers are parents themselves, and it brings me great joy when they tell me they're sharing my stories with their own children.

Over the years, the series has evolved right along with Jack and Annie. Fifteen years ago, we introduced the Merlin Missions for older Magic Tree House readers with book #29, Christmas in Camelot. Now, with so many Merlin Missions available, we want to make sure that those looking for adventures with Jack and Annie are aware that these books are longer and more complex than the original 28. So we've renumbered the Merlin Mission books and refreshed the covers to clearly differentiate between the two distinct reading levels.

The new branding encourages young readers to progress from the shorter Magic Tree House adventures to the more challenging Merlin Missions. It also allows me to add to the line of younger Magic Tree House books that had stopped with #28 in the series. We hope you, as a parent, will also benefit from the rebrand when trying to locate the titles best suited for your own child.

There are topics for every reader in the Magic Tree House series—science, sports, geography, wildlife, history, the arts—and always a bit of mystery and magic. In 2017, our 25th-anniversary year, we hope to make it even clearer that Magic Tree House is a series for kids to stay and grow with.

Thank you for your constant and enthusiastic support! We look forward to another 25 years of introducing kids to the joy of reading.

Dear Bookseller,

For 25 years, it has been my joy to write the Magic Tree House series. I have been especially thrilled to receive so much encouragement and support from booksellers like you.

During this time, the series has evolved right along with Jack and Annie. Fifteen years ago, we introduced the Merlin Missions for older Magic Tree House readers with book #29, Christmas in Camelot. As we didn't want parents and kids to miss the connection to the original books, "Merlin Missions" was a discreet addition to the cover.

Now, with so many Merlin Missions available, we want to make sure that parents, teachers, and readers are aware that these books are longer and more complex than the original 28. So we're renumbering them and making it clearer on the covers that these are two distinct reading levels.

The new branding encourages young readers to progress from the shorter Magic Tree House adventures to the more challenging Merlin Missions. It also allows me to add to the line of younger Magic Tree House books.

There are topics for every reader in the Magic Tree House series—science, sports, geography, wildlife, history, the arts—and always a bit of mystery and magic. In 2017, our anniversary year, we hope to make it even clearer that Magic Tree House is a series for kids to stay and grow with.
